Week after week Chinamen are convicted of opium smoking in our Police Court, and the inquiry is very common, and very natural—'Where do they get the opium from?' There has to be plenty of charges to be heard before the Police Court, and the opium trade there has scarcely been any. There used also to be a penalty for smuggling opium, one half of which went to the active Customs Officer who detected the crime, and the other half to the Government. This arrangement has been meted out to opium smugglers. Is there any connection between these two sets of circumstances?

The Board of Health has issued a notice that inter-island quarantine will be removed on the 12th inst., in regard to persons, who have a medical certificate of satisfactory vaccination and general good health; and who have submitted their baggage to a thorough fumigation under the direction of an agent of the Board.

Mr. Peter Acosta, the well known stevedore and the Libellos, has dissolved connections with that vessel, and is now proprietor of the Cosmopolitan Restaurant, on Hotel Street. His former reputation as chef de cuisine will stand him in good stead.

A correspondent of the S. F. Evening Bulletin, in a letter from Honolulu, dated June 24th, referring to Leprosy, says: 'Mr. Carter, Chairman of the Board of Health believes that the number of leprosy cases which this year settlement—subsequent to the last small-pox epidemic, probably 6000 became this disease through vaccination with human virus.'

LOOK OUT FOR MOSQUITOES AND FLIES.—In Japan it has long been recognized by the native physicians that mosquitoes are active agents in conveying the virus of malignant pustules from one person to another. The researches of Dr. Patrick Manson in Amoy have led to the suspicion that the spread of Elephantiasis in the south of Japan is due to the same pest. Flies are also to be transmitted of disease. In China, the bat-fly is dreaded as a transmitter of the plague. Our precautions against the spread of mosquitoes and flies, should be confined to our beds alone, but our rooms should be effectually barred. Mosquitoes should be placed in every window and door way, and a netting or sitting room in this country. When a mosquito or fly is probing you with his proboscis he may be inoculating you with some contagious disease.

The work of renovating the wharf known as 'Brewer's' is being proceeded with steadily, if not very rapidly. The ruins of that part of the old wharf which were crushed into the water and almost completely buried, except where, at short intervals, houses are to be seen peeping through the verdure. Everywhere, on the way, fragile canoes, and boats with nothing but a big palm leaf for a sail, were to be seen; and here and there natives spinning twine and cordage with their primitive appliance—a windmill rigged on the end of a long pole stuck in the river bank. In due time the scene was varied by the appearance of a delightful resort, amongst the desert to which the masonry confined the visitors, whose ideas of the future to prevent public property from being destroyed by neglect, people who like to allow large piles of goods to accumulate upon them in order to save themselves some expense or trouble.

'To shuffle off this mortal coil.'—To cross the bourne from which no traveler returns. 'To step from Time into Eternity.'—be the circumstances that they may be—the character is essential to what this last ordeal prescribes itself what it may is a solemn, awe-inspiring thing. The human mind is so constituted that, if some sound, it cannot tolerate death without emotion of a kind that is almost insupportable. To the influence of what poison, physical or psychical, can we attribute the death of the writer of the following words? 'All our readers will remember Mr. Nip Kiu, the enterprising gentleman who collected a debt of four dollars by shooting a man in the neck; they will also be sorry to hear that the former gentleman has managed to outwit the Judiciary and Executive by dying of his own accord late in June, instead of being hanged. We hope that he read them properly turned out on the gallows, some time in October next.'—Where we found them we do not care to tell, who wrote them we do not desire to know. We hope that they read them turned from them with the like disgust and sense of humiliation which they inspired in us.

The new mansion for H. H. Ruth Keekalani in Emma street is already ready for occupation, and the grounds in front of it are now being tastefully laid out on a design of which Mr. S. K. Kaai is, we believe, the author. Those who have had the opportunity to inspect the building, have been much struck with its convenient arrangement and the rich manner in which it has been ornamented internally. An architect of the decorative work in place was given in the ADVERTISER some time ago, to which we may add that the whole has since been carried out in a high class style by the contractor, Mr. John E. Bowler. Among the work executed since our last notice, are panels in each of the three parlors, containing the Hawaiian coat of arms, and the whole work in place was given in the ADVERTISER some time ago, to which we may add that the whole has since been carried out in a high class style by the contractor, Mr. John E. Bowler.

'Shooting cases,' an American euphemism for attempts at willful murder, will soon be as common in our Islands as they are in the Western States of the Union. On Friday last week the Deputy Sheriff of Makawao, Maui, Mr. C. Walsh, whilst attending a lever, suddenly fell a victim to a shot from a revolver. Mr. Walsh's official report on this encounter is as follows: 'Yesterday, while out in the country, I was accompanied by a man named near the house of a leper who was said to be carrying around a shot gun and a revolver, and who had said he would kill anyone who attempted to take him to the hospital. I was walking (Constable) and went into the house. One of the men was fastened and Kabele said he was there. I told him to open the door, and he pulled the door and I went in. The man was sitting on a bed facing the door and with a revolver in his hand. I told him to get up and he got up. I pulled the revolver at me, and reached for a shot gun. I then sprang for him but before I could get him he fired and the ball struck me on the side, penetrating my coat and lodging in my pocket. I made a red place by the concussion, just at the edge of my lower rib on the right side. I got hold of him before he could fire again, and I wrenched the revolver away from him. It is a .38 calibre, self-loading 'British Bulldog.' I also got the gun. Kabele came to my assistance, and we have him in jail. Dr. Standley said that had it not been for my pocket-book I would have had a fatal wound.'

Complaints are often made of the number of deaths in Honolulu in the 'cave,' and the still greater number in which there has been no medical attendance on the deceased. Whose fault is this? We have a Government whose duty it is to put an end to such a condition of things. That they have been warned by the Legislature on this subject every one knows, or ought to know. For the benefit of our present rulers, the following extract from the Parliamentary papers is hereby given: 'I have been informed that the Government has appointed a committee to investigate the matter which has been referred to the Legislature of 1878. I have great difficulty in ascertaining the results of their inquiry, but I hope that the authorities, by co-operation with our Legislative representatives, will obtain the passage of such laws as are necessary to compel parents and guardians to obtain medical attendance for children, and also to make it necessary to produce a certificate of the cause of death from the attending physician, before a certificate of burial can be granted, and in case no physician has attended the deceased person, the certificate of cause of death issue from the coroner. I think it is fair to assume that 25 per cent of those dying unattended might have been saved by medical attendance.'

The King's Tour Round the World.

The arrival of the D. C. Murray places us in possession of intelligence as to His Majesty's movements after leaving Hong Kong. Passing over the uneventful voyage from that port to the mouth of the great water-highway of Siam, we have to record the arrival of the royal party off the bar of the Menam about 10 A. M. on the 20th of April. On entering the river, the steam yacht of the King of Siam was seen approaching, and shortly afterwards a twelve-oared boat carrying the White Elephant came alongside her, carrying an officer of His Majesty's household, commissioned to tender to King Kalakaua the hospitality of his brother in Siam. The invitation was accompanied by expressions of regret on the part of His Majesty that he had not received sufficiently early notice of the arrival of his royal visitor to allow of his meeting him in person at the river bar. Another boat, accompanied that of the Aide-de-Camp, DISSAWORKMARE, Salutations were exchanged, and the whole party proceeded on board the royal yacht, which is described as 'a beautiful boat,' and made in her the voyage up the Menam to Bangkok, a distance of about twenty miles. The arrival of the King of Siam was found and fitted seems to have excited the admiration of all the party. Under an awning, so tasteful in its character as to attract attention even among so many novelties, cool drinks and delicious liquors had been provided in profusion, with the welcome accompaniment of the choicest of Manila and Siamese cheroots. The Menam, though a great stream, winds and wanders through the level country below Bangkok, its banks covered with thick timber and almost impenetrable jungle, except where, at short intervals, houses are to be seen peeping through the verdure. Everywhere, on the way, fragile canoes, and boats with nothing but a big palm leaf for a sail, were to be seen; and here and there natives spinning twine and cordage with their primitive appliance—a windmill rigged on the end of a long pole stuck in the river bank. In due time the scene was varied by the appearance of a delightful resort, amongst the desert to which the masonry confined the visitors, whose ideas of the future to prevent public property from being destroyed by neglect, people who like to allow large piles of goods to accumulate upon them in order to save themselves some expense or trouble.

At eight o'clock the next morning King Kalakaua and his suite, accompanied by the Prince, their host, paid a visit to an uncle of the Siamese King, and from thence went to see the sacred white elephants, the slow procession of Bangkok. After breakfast His Majesty held a reception, when the foreign Consuls and other Siamese officials were present. Subsequently a visit was paid to the King's chapel, where His Majesty had officiated as priest, as a necessary preliminary to taking the oaths on his accession to the throne. Here every vessel and ornament was of pure gold inlaid with precious stones. One casket which holds a set of perfumed flowers had for a cover a clear pebble of golden color emulating the calcareous in lustre, eight inches in diameter. A single plate set with rubies and sapphires was valued at more than $20,000, and everything else was of like costly character. On returning home the King received an intimation from the captain of the steamer he was traveling by, that he must leave at 10 a. m. the following day.

At four o'clock in the afternoon, the arrival of a troop of cavalry announced the approach of His Siamese Majesty to return the visit of King Kalakaua. He came in a carriage, which to the eyes of his guests appeared to be a gold drawn by four horses. His Majesty was accompanied by who were in attendance on him, alighted and were received at the threshold of the palace by King Kalakaua. Congratulations were exchanged and, on the occasion of their former meeting only the two monarchs were seated. After a short conversation His Majesty was informed of the intended departure of his guests on the following morning, and expressed himself as much disappointed. He had hoped that our King would extend his stay and enjoy a hunt, and make a tour through the Kingdom in the royal yacht, which was to have been placed at his disposal. Finding that this was not possible, His Majesty expressed the hope that at some future time he would have the opportunity of extending these courtesies to his royal guests, and shortly afterwards took his leave. The day was finished at the residence of the Siamese Minister of the Interior, where the King was entertained at dinner and met a distinguished company.

That His Siamese Majesty was sincere in the regret he expressed at the hurried departure of his guests, soon made manifest. During the evening King Kalakaua was informed that his royal brother had exceeded his authority and delayed the steamer until the following morning, Sunday, April 30th. On Saturday morning a visit was paid to a Buddhist temple in true Oriental style the royal host did not allow his guests to depart until presents suitable to his rank. In the evening a dinner was given at the palace, and at eleven the following morning a regretful leave-taking was taken by the Siamese monarch and his suite, his hospitable monarch, and the kindly men of rank who had vied with their sovereign in his endeavor to make the stay of the visitors from the lonely Isles of the Pacific as delightful as a dream.

The royal robe presented by the King of Siam was succeeded by an elephant of solid gold—Not a exactly life-size, but about five inches high, and standing in glass case. Another present was the History of Siam (in ancient script, woven in gold on a dark fabric, folded up in book form); also the modern history of the Kingdom of Siam, in print. Also a tea service of pure gold.

The dinner at the palace was a grand, royal banquet. Two bands played from different points in the park, which was illuminated in variegated colors. His Majesty and suite were started, as they took seats on sumptuous chairs, to listen to melodious tones brought forth by the pressure of their persons. They sat down upon most ingeniously contrived musical boxes.

April 20.—After dinner at the palace His Majesty King Kalakaua was installed as a Knight of the Grand Cross of the Crown of Siam. The insignia of the Order was conferred on him by the King of Siam. His Majesty is styled in the diploma 'Ma Sa Sambarun; or Knight Grand Cross of our Most Honorable Order of the Crown of Siam.' His Majesty will hold the Order of Siam until he shall hold and enjoy forever. Given at our Court at Parama, Ragsashi, Mahoran, on Saturday, the 31 day of the month Visakha, of the year 2437 of the Buddhist Decade, 1243 of the Siamese astronomical era, being the 4,547th day, or the fourteenth year of our Reign.
